Other Lone Eagle Attempts Flight Across Atlantic

Destination Not Known Until After Well On Way

LONDON IS HIS GOAL

Had Only 165 Gallons of Gasoline Aboard At Start

HARBOR GRACE, Nfld., Oct. 22.—(AP)—Without a word of warning as to his intention M. F. Dite-man, Jr., of Billings, Mont., hopped off today for London, England. His destination was not made known until after his departure when a letter to airport officials was opened.

The ultram carried only 165 gallons of gasoline when he took off. In the letter he said he intended to head out over Cape St. Francis and then set a course straight for London.

Dite-man came here three weeks ago ostensibly to look up the family record of Sir Francis Drake.

The take off was at 12:15, local time, with good weather prevailing. The ship, the "Golden Hind," is a low-winged monoplane.

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—(AP)—M. F. Dite-man flew from New York to St. Johns, New Brunswick, early this morning, saying he was interested in a search of family records in Carleton county, in connection with an estate in which he was interested. At that time nothing was known of his intention to try a trans-Atlantic flight.

Dr. James H. Kimball, of the New York weather bureau, said that weather conditions were "fairly favorable" over most of the Atlantic ocean.

Dr. Kimball, who has been unofficial starter for many trans-Atlantic flights, said he had not been informed of Dite-man's plans.

Edison Fatigued By Ceremonies

Leaves Banquet Hall Before President Had Spoken

DEARBORN, Mich., Oct. 22.—(AP)—So fatigued by a day of ceremonies in his honor that he had to leave the banquet hall last night before President Hoover had spoken, Thomas A. Edison was described as in fair shape today.

The inventor left the hall immediately after he had delivered a brief speech. The President's physician, Lieutenant Commander Joel T. Boone, accompanied him from the hall and examined him in an ante room and except fatigue found no indication of anything wrong.

Man Says Is 'Fall Guy' In Rum Deal

Takes Blame In Deal In Which Illinois Congressman Involved

TAMPA, Fla., Oct. 22.—(AP)—Walter Gramm, Chicago coal dealer and reputedly wealthy, arrested on a liquor law violation charge in Key West early last May after he had assumed responsibility for ownership of liquor found in trucks brought into this country from Cuba by Congressman M. Alfred Michelson, of Illinois, entered a plea of guilty in Federal court here today and was fined $1000 and costs.

Gramm's attorney made a plea of "necessity" on the grounds that his client was "a respectable business man," the error "just a social one," and that the defendant was a "fall guy." Gramm was a member of Congressman Michelson's party, it was pointed out, and there was "no commercial aspect to the liquor transaction."

Judge Akerman said he had no desire to wreck a man's life by the imposition of a jail sentence so would assess only a fine.

At That He Likely Got Value Received

TEXARKANA, Ark., Oct. 22.—(AP)—It cost L. E. Martin of Houston, La., $25 for looking too long and hard at two pretty flappers on a street here.

Martin crashed into Mrs. James Russell's automobile, and then his car jumped the curb and landed on a lawn.

Mrs. Russell told the municipal court Martin was oblivious to every thing but the two feminine objects on the curb.

Martin agreed he was "pretty busy," too, but he said also he forgot all about the girls after the owner of the lawn finished telling him what he thought of people who drive deliberately on other people's lawns.

The charge was reckless driving.

Lawbreaking On Sabbath Scored

But It Is Unfair To Discriminate, Declares W. S. Atkins

Editor, The Star:

In yesterday's issue of your good paper you stated, with reference to the case of the State against the Public-Saenger Theatres of Arkansas, Inc., that the defense "contended that the Arkansas Sabbath Law was not religious in its nature." On this point you were in error. The defense did state that the law of the state did not require observance of the Sabbath as a religious duty, but for the moral and economic welfare of the state.

In this connection I might add that the observance of the Sabbath is religious in its nature, and had its origin in the dim and remote past, but as a matter of law it could not be enforced as a religious duty without being in direct conflict with Section 24 of Article 2 of the Constitution of Arkansas.

Changing conditions and an increase in the population have always, to some extent, brought about changes in the laws of course, a law is nothing more than public sentiment crystallized; and as to whether or not we make progress with respect to our laws depends largely on the type of citizenship we have. In other words, a government of the people, for the people and by the people, cannot make progress without a well informed citizenship, which, of course, means that all the people should give the necessary thought and consideration to the question of government, and laws by which they will be governed.

In view of the wonderful progress made by our country in material matters, the question of law and law enforcement is possibly of more importance today than ever before.

Relative to observing the Sabbath, permit me to say, in my humble opinion, the Sabbath should be strictly observed; and this is true regardless of whether we feel constrained to observe it as a religious duty or not, because as a moral and economic necessity the observance of the Sabbath is beneficial to all our people. But one great trouble with the American people, with reference to law enforcement, is inconsistency. If it is right, and the writer thinks Physicians say he has a slight chance to recover.

Hoover Dedicates Inland Waterways To World Service

Says Nine-Foot Canal To "Now Begin Quiet Labor for Mankind"

LOCK, DAM SYSTEM

Executive Congratulates Ohio Valley and the Nation

EDEN PARK, Cincinnati, Oct. 22.—(AP)—Standing on a towering bluff overlooking the Ohio river President Hoover today dedicated a white granite shaft commemorating the completion of the lock system on the waterways from Pittsburgh to Cairo.

"This new agency of service will now begin its quiet labors for mankind," Mr. Hoover said in congratulating the Ohio valley and the nation. "This new agent will be of incalculable benefit to commerce year after year. It is a monument to those patriotic men of my own profession whose lives are spent in devising means for increasing the comforts and conveniences of mankind."

The canalization embraces the construction of 49 locks and dams at an estimated expenditure of $118,000,000. The work will insure a nine foot stage in the river at all times.

Natural Gas Soon Piped To Nashville

Intend To Complete Line In Time for Cold Weather

SHREVEPORT, Oct. 22.—According to officials of the Arkansas-Louisiana Pipe Line Company right-of-way has been approved and purchased for the laying of the four-inch line from Okay to Nashville, and a large crew of men has been put to work cutting the right-of-way.

The work of laying the fourteen miles of line will be started immediately, officials say, under the supervision of L. W. Young, main line superintendent of the Arkansas-Louisiana Pipe Line Company.

The material for laying the line has all been ordered and the supplies are arriving at distribution points daily. Every effort is being used to rush the completion of this project and serve Nashville with natural gas at as early date as possible.

Deputy Sheriff Shot Three Times

Effort To Arrest Robbery Suspect Leads To Gun Play

FAYETTEVILLE, Oct. 22.—(AP)—Tosh Bean, deputy sheriff of Washington county, is in a hospital here today with three bullet wounds in his legs and shoulders said to have been inflicted last night by John Walker, of Dutch Mills, near here, when Bean went to arrest him on a charge of robbery.

Walker has not been arrested to date. He is charged with having robbed John Glenn, of Dutch Mills, of $300 yesterday.

Bean is expected to recover.

Duck Season To Open November 1.

Hunters Must Secure A License To Be Inside The Law

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 22.—Color weather forecast for Arkansas for the next few days, coupled with increasingly cold weather in Northern states, is expected to bring ducks to Arkansas in large numbers. Guy Amster, secretary of the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission, said yesterday. Reports from several sections during the past few days indicated that there are fewer ducks in the state now than at this date in several years.

The duck hunting season opens November 1 and continues to January 31. The resident hunting license fee is $1.10 a year and the nonresident fee is $15. Licenses may be obtained from the Game Commission offices at Little Rock or from circuit clerks in most counties.

Init School Plan Under Legal Fire In Pike County

Suit Prevent Operation Is Filed By Citizens Opposing Plan

ILLEGAL VOTES CAST

Plaintiffs Say Election Tainted By Fraud and Irregularities

MURFREESBORO, Oct. 22.—Suit has been filed here to prevent the operation of the county school unit system in Pike county by attorneys for N. A. Lamb, Corra Holt, H. G. Humphrey, L. L. Dabbs, J. P. Avery and H. D. Dean, citizens of the county opposed to the plan, which was adopted at a special election recently held in Pike county on the question.

In the special election the question carried by a good majority on the face of the returns, but the plaintiffs in this case allege that irregularities and illegal voting occurred in the election, and that the unit system was defeated instead of adopted. No date for the hearing has been set.

Funds for the suit have been contributed by those opposed to the unit plan, and it is reported that sufficient funds have been contributed to insure a thorough fight.

Pike county is the only county in the state which has put the county unit system into effect, and the state Department of Education has made plans for using the county as a model under the new plan.

Passengers In Burning Plane Given Absolution

LONDON, Oct. 22.—(AP)—A dispatch to the Express from Brussels today said a Roman Catholic priest flying from Antwerp to Ghent, Saturday, pronounced absolution for the dying on behalf of his 11 fellow passengers.

The plane's carburetor took fire and the 11, believing they were doomed, besought absolution of the priest; he readily complied.

While he recited the solemn words the pilot carried on in growing peril and finally landed his plane safely. The passengers were scarcely clear of it when the gasoline tanks exploded and the machine was destroyed completely.

Free Auto License List In State Thing of the Past After January 1

Fees Must Be Paid On All State, County and City Cars Next Year Is Ruling of Highway Commission

The official or free automobile tag will be only a memory in Arkansas after January 1.

Act No. 52 of 1929 abolished the official tag, authorized by an act of 1921, and requires that an application from the county collector showing that the full amount of the license fee has been paid must be presented to the Highway Department before tags can be issued to any person, firm or corporation.

Highway Commissioner Dwight H. Blackwood has sent notices to sheriffs, county judges, mayors, members of county Boards of Education and heads of state institutions calling attention to the new law.

The act was sponsored in the House by Representative Ed Gordon of Conway county, and in the Senate by Senator Gus F. Clerget of the Twenty-sixth district, which includes Conway, Cleburne, Searcy and Van Buren counties. The principal argument made in behalf of the measure was that it would eliminate abuses of the free license provision of the automobile tax law. It was contended that official tags were used in many instances on privately owned cars.

The new statute consists of two sections. The first provides that: "No automobile license tag shall be issued or furnished by the State Highway Department to any person, firm or corporation until receipt signed by the duly authorized collector has been filed with the State Highway Department, showing that the full amount of said license fee as required by law has been paid."

The second section repeals Section No. 3 of Act No. 494 of 1921 and other statutes in conflict with the new act.

For several years an official tag, differing in color and design from other tags, was issued for use on vehicles owned by any branch of the state, county and city governments. No distinction has been made in design of official tags for the past two years, but a block of numbers has been set aside for official tags. The 283,000 block was designated as official tags for 1929.

Under the new law, it will be necessary for state departments and institutions, as well as branches of county and city governments to pay for tags for publicly owned vehicles out of maintenance funds.

Commissioner Blackwood announced that issuance of 1930 automobile tags will begin December 20, the commission being authorized under the highway reorganization act to begin issuing tags on or before January 1 of each year.

All sheriffs were notified by the Highway Department yesterday that application forms will be sent to them prior to December 20.

Commissioner Blackwood said distribution will begin early to avoid the usual congestion attending the effort to issue tags during the first 10 days of January.

Sheriffs were requested to date all 1930 applications issued this year as of January 1, 1930, so records of the sheriffs' offices and Highway Department can be kept straight.

Texarkana Science Classes Ingenious

TEXARKANA, Oct. 22.—(AP)—W. C. Brashears, principal of the North Heights school here, declared pupils in his science classes have gone the world one better by exhibiting a mouse that not only eats but relishes snakes.

The rodent, Mr. Brashears said, has existed the past few days on a diet of three lizards, one queen snake 18 inches long, a spreading adder and a ribbon snake.

A snake eating mouse, however, is just one of the freaks the students are flaunting in the faces of unbelievers. Recently, they exhibited at a parent-teacher carnival an owl with a monkey face. The classes also own a boa constrictor.

Former Spa Clerk Faces Court Jury

HOT SPRINGS, Oct. 22.—(AP)—The state rested its case today in the trial of Fred J. Fowler, former city clerk, on a charge of embezzling $3,000 of the city's funds and Fowler took the stand in an attempt to explain alleged discrepancies in the records.

Fowler vehemently denied any shortage in his accounts and asserted that if he had been given access to the books following his removal from office he could have explained every apparent discrepancy to the auditors.

The Farm Board Gets Busy

ONE hundred million dollars of federal money is to be made available to farm co-operatives at once to bolster up cotton prices throughout the South.

In its announcement, made yesterday, the Federal Farm Board revealed the peculiar need of political interference sometimes in the course of national business. The Board's statement read in part:

"The Federal Farm Board believes that the present prevailing prices for cotton are too low. The total supply of American cotton is less than last year, consumption continues at a world rate equal to that of last year; unfilled orders and actual sales of cotton goods are more and stocks are smaller than last year, yet the price of the raw product is less. The board believes this unsatisfactory price level is chiefly due to the open fall weather which in most Southern states has led to exceptionally rapid marketing by producers in amounts greater than the markets of the world can temporarily absorb. This, in turn, has led to lack of confidence in cotton values."

The theory behind government supervision and financing of the marketing of crops is, that if the farmer obtained each year the 10-year-average price of the crop, he would make money. But in the uncontrolled market on farm products the producer often finds that the fluctuation is so violent that he loses on bad years more than he can make in good ones—although the 10-year average ought to show a profitable business.

In this respect the farmer faces the same problem that confronts the city business man. The overhead goes on whether the business is there or not, and if the volume of business cannot be equalized through the ordinary channels of trade, then artificial restraint is exercised by consolidations, agreements, or understandings.

This, the farmer never has been able to do, except in the case of the citrus growers and other highly organized branches of agriculture. Organization does not come naturally to the farmer, living as he does in a million independent establishments—and he suffers economically because of it.

The purpose of the Federal Farm Board, therefore, is highly commendable. Its aim is to go into agricultural markets and equalize prices in any given year. This year, for instance, the Board says that the condition of supply and demand clearly indicates an average price of 16 cents or better for cotton—and the resources of the federal government will be used to save the cotton farmer from having to sell below that figure. If he grows more cotton next year this average price will be lower; if he grows less, the price will climb.

Good and Bad Lobbying

THE approaching investigation of lobbyists' activities by the Senate on, however, the general public should keep one or two things in mind, to avoid misconceptions.

In the first place, there is nothing wrong in lobbying, in itself.

Every American citizen has the right to go to Washington to intercede for or against any legislation whatever. In a free democracy, it could not be otherwise. Similarly, any organized group of citizens has the same right. There is nothing intrinsically wrong in a body of manufacturers, importers, labor unions, church organizations or anyone else sending agents to Washington to try to influence Congress in the performance of its duties.

It is in the abuse of this right that trouble arises, and it is with such abuse that the Senate investigation is concerning itself.

It is decidedly wrong, for instance, for a lobbyist to misrepresent himself. When a man is in reality in the pay of a group of shipbuilders, he is harming the whole country if he pretends to be simply a disinterested patriot, acting from unselfish motives.

Similarly, it is decidedly wrong for lobbyists to exert the wrong kind of pressure. Presenting facts, figures and arguments to congressional committees is one thing; trying to influence individual congressmen by granting favors of any kind is something else. The "social lobby," which tries to change congressmen's views by appealing to their love for social advancement, is a bad thing. So is the practice of loaning money to congressmen, giving them "inside tips" on the stock market or offering thinly disguised bribes in the shape of promised employment when the term of office ends.

This kind of lobbying is a menace to the country. It is the kind the Senate is investigating. But lobbying, in itself, is not a crime.

Now, All Together!

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—Unless the organizations develop cold feet, which they seldom do, Senator Sheppard's bill to brand the buyers of liquor as equally guilty with the sellers probably will turn out to be the issue in the most important prohibition fight for several years.

If the bill is made a law there will be virtually nothing left for the dries to ask for in the way of legislation excepting measures so extreme that no one has previously considered them advisable to press. The dries experimented with heavier penalties when they put over the Jones law, but hardly anyone argues that the "five and ten" act has had any particular effect on the enforcement situation.

It May Not Pass

There is some chance that the Sheppard bill will be allowed to die a quiet death. It does not appear to represent the considered program of the dry organizations, though it has the approval of Bishop Cannon, who is the strongest individual figure among them. Some of the most important dry leaders are going cautiously, explaining that they desire first to determine the possible legal obstacles to a law covering liquor buyers, which may indicate that they desire first to observe the general reaction toward the measure.

In this connection it is interesting to note that some of the strongest dries in Congress are opposed to the bill. Although a few of those who have already declared against it may change their minds under Anti-Saloon League pressure, a vote in either house is likely to roll up the largest "wet" minority vote since the passage of the Volstead act.

The effect of such a law is the most important point for every one concerned to think about and there you have views diametrically opposed.

Some dries believe that millions of Americans would stop patronizing bootleggers, unwilling to join a class at last recognized as criminal by the statutes.

Others fear that it would have no such effect and that, on the contrary, it would tend to stiffen resistance to the prohibition laws by automatically creating the largest class of lawbreakers with which any government ever had to deal.

Legal experts of the Prohibition Bureau say that while such a law might result in more convictions, its principal effect upon the community would be as a method of moral suasion. Some of them are convinced that it would result in a large reduction of the amount of liquor consumed and that it would tend importantly to make abstinence "respectable."

Both the dries and the prohibition enforcers are emphatic in the contention that the purchaser is morally as guilty as the vendor. "The difference," says Passyfoot Johnson, "is the difference between the inmate and the frequenter of a disorderly house."

But in the past the dries haven't felt that a law covering purchasers was worth fighting for. Wayne B. Wheeler and his companions decided to let it ride when they framed the Volstead Act and passed it. The act provides that no one shall buy liquor without obtaining a permit, and of course the permits are unobtainable. The act doesn't make the provision stick by applying any penalty.

The Twenty-Third Psalm
The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

No U. D. C. Convention is complete without the following poem, written by Major S. A. Jones, a former editor of the Aberdeen (Miss.) Examiner. Major Jones was known to thousands throughout the South, he had an enviable war record and was a fit representative of the old school of Southern gentlemen, was an uncle of Mr. Ike and Miss Maggie Bell of this city.

LYNES ON THE BACK OF A CONFEDERATE NOTE

Representing nothing on God's earth now,
And naught in the waters below it,
As the pledge of a nation that's dead and gone
Keep it, dear friend, and show it.

Show it to those who will lend an ear,
To the tale that this trifle can tell,
Of a liberty born of the patriot's dream
Of a storm-crashed nation that fell.

Too poor to possess the precious ores
And too much of a stranger to borrow,
We issued today our promise to pay,
And hoped to redeem on the morrow.

The days rolled by and the weeks became years,
But our coffers were empty still;
Coin was so rare that the treasury'd quake
If a dollar would drop in the till.

But faith that was in us was strong indeed,
And our poverty well we discerned
And this little check represented the pay
That our suffering veterans earned.

We knew it had hardly a value in gold,
Yet as gold each soldier received it,
It grazed in our eyes with a promise to pay
And each Southern patriot believed it.

But our hopes thought little of price or of pay,
Or of bills that were overdue;
We know if it brought us our bread today,
Twas the best our poor country could do.

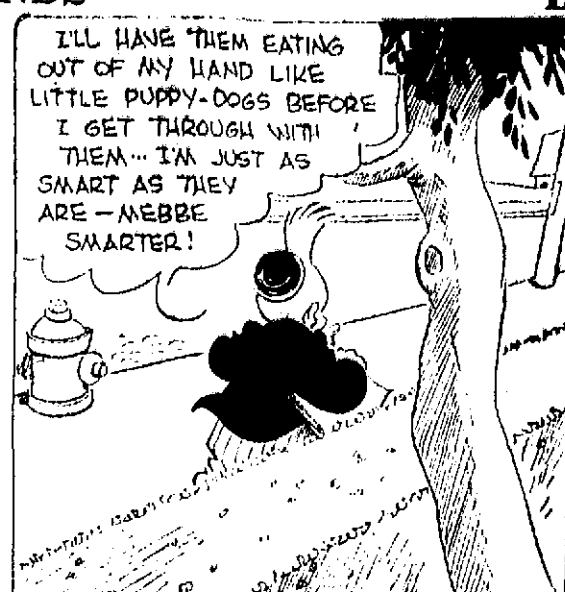

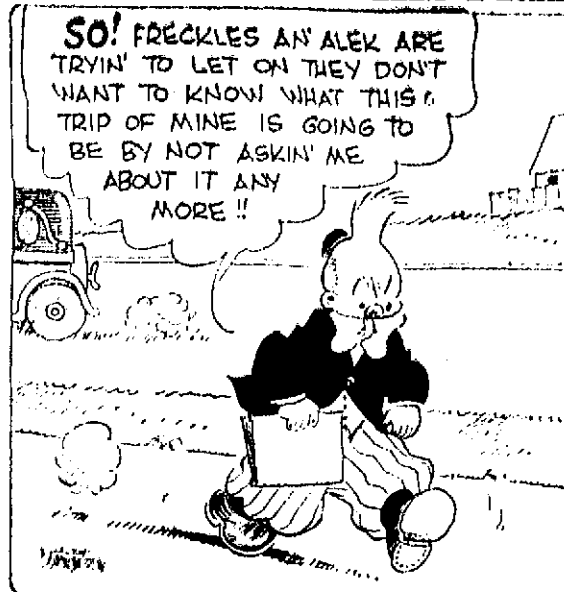

Keep it, it tells our history o'er
Frow the birth of a dream to its last;
Modest and born of the angel Hope,
Like our hope of success is passed.

—S. A. Jones.

CHAPTER XLIII
"Bob will believe me!" Helen declared her faith in her lover's trust without a moment's hesitation.
Surprisingly, Brent nodded his head in agreement. "Won't you sit down now?" he said. "I've something more to say to you." He glanced at his watch. "Or perhaps you'd better send your friend Shaliman off to the station before we go on with this."
Helen sank into a chair. "She's in the breakfast room," she said weakly. "Tell her I'd like her to take a later train; I can't see her off now."
Brent left to do her bidding, but was quickly back. He noted, as soon as he entered the room, a change in Helen. Given a few moments to think she had decided he was lying to her, tricking her.
How simple it was, of course. She felt like laughing, only somehow there was, strangely, inexplicably, an odor of truth about it all. She fought against it.
"I hate to tell you this," Brent began, dejected by her manner into thinking she was not going to take it so hard after all.
Helen threw back her head and held her eyes fastened levelly on his.
"I don't believe a word you have said," she stated emphatically.
"You don't?" Brent came close, grasped her wrists with cruel strength, forced her down into the chair and towered over her in a menacing attitude.
"You don't?" he repeated. "Then listen to me. I can prove that you are Helen Page and not Cunningham's granddaughter. That will be easy."
Helen stiffly defied him. "But you cannot prove what it is not true," she cried. "You cannot prove that I had anything to do with your fraud."
"It will not be necessary to prove it," Brent retorted. "If you persist in marrying young Ennis I shall make your story front page newspaper stuff inside 24 hours. What then? Lou aren't Helen Nellin, don't forget that. You'll be torn from your high and mighty seat to the gutter—possibly you'll have a chance to learn what women's prisons were built for."
"Don't be a fool," Brent snapped at her. "I'll be safely out of it. You'll be left to stand the gaff alone. Your exposure will come through information that I shall supply indirectly to the authorities. I'll give the whole thing to the newspapers at the same time. Let your boy friend stand by you then. Suppose you went free—there'd always be a doubt in the public mind about your innocence. What would that mean to Ennis?"
Helen saw at once that it would be irreparable injury to his career, but only the deepening pain in her eyes answered Brent. It was enough.
"Do for him, wouldn't it?" Even if he believed you, there's a good if he believed you, and there's a good chance that he won't."
Helen had one lucid thought. "He'll believe me," she said, "because he'll know that I wouldn't have dared to think of marrying him if this were true and you held me in your power."
Brent regarded her admiringly. "Rather clever," he praised. "But not weighty enough. He's apt to imagine you thought you could handle me."
"Oh, you are fiendish!"
"Merely determined, my dear. That no upstart like Ennis is going to spoil my plans now."
"Then you think I will consent to go on with this deception?"
"This imposture?" Helen cried, amazed that he should know her so little he could believe such a thing possible.
"For the sake of millions, and your liberty, yes," Brent admitted. "It's unthinkable!" Helen stormed. "You will have to prove what you have said—that I am not Helen Cunningham's daughter, and if it is true I shall renounce the fortune myself!"
"Oh, you will?" Brent sneered. "Well, my noble young lady, do that trifling little thing and you'll have plenty of time to repent behind the bars."
"But you can't prove that I—"
"Are you really so dense that you fail to see your position itself will prove it for me?" Brent cut in. "Confession on my part will throw the burden of defense on you, and what will you fight with? You haven't a penny of your own. And you will need money, and friends. Public opinion, public sympathy, will be against you from the start—taking in a dying old man—giving him Judas kisses—lying to him, just waiting for him to—"
"Oh, no, no," Helen wailed.
"A pretty picture, no?" Brent passed on. "Daughter of once famous creek comes into her own as queen of impostors. Blindly infatuated young law student remains loyal, turning his back upon his career for the sake of a bewitching face. Not so bad, eh? I'll make it dramatic enough, don't worry!"
Helen bowed her face in her hands and Brent observed her shivering young body without pity.
"On the other hand," he said at last, "you can have everything. And love is not a lasting thing. Helen. Don't be hoodwinked by that notion. It's been exploded too many times. Astonishing that anyone continues to believe it. You will forget Ennis, even if it takes time. But you never could forget—the world wouldn't let you—that you had ruined his life, robbed him of the chance to look every man in the face—that seems to be the absurd ambition of any number of brainless idiots," he added dryly.
"I—I don't have to marry him," Helen gulped. "I can give the money back to Mr. Cunningham's lawyer and go away somewhere."
"Yes, if the police will let you," Brent agreed.
"You will tell, whether I marry Bob or not? or wouldn't let me restore the money and—"
"Certainly not," Brent returned firmly. "You will either marry me or face exposure. And I warn you, Helen, I won't stand for any nonsense. You'll come through all the way or you'll take the rap—underworld jargon," he smiled with mock apology. "It means plenty. You've led a sheltered life, my dear, you know nothing whatsoever of the hell that awaits you if you let yourself in for a stretch up the river. Better give it a lot of thought before you decide."
"There isn't anything to decide," Helen said brokenly. "I cannot marry you."
For a moment Brent said nothing. Then: "You may feel differently about it when you've had time to think it over. In the meantime you might go into social service and find out at first hand what happens to jailbirds. And—if you can arrange it—go take a look at the poor devils in prison. Don't settle your fate blindly, without knowing what you're doing. You'll never be able to undo it. You'd be in the morgue in no time at all after they let you go with your prison pallor and your prison-marked soul. A girl like you! God, you'd become a dope fiend!"
Helen shrank down into her chair. The back of her hand flew to her mouth to stifle a scream.
"I think life with me would be preferable to that," Brent continued. "As your husband I should be far more interested in your fortune than in you, Helen. I am not, fortunately, in love with you."
"You mean," Helen looked at him hopefully, "that you wouldn't want to live with me?"
Brent shrugged. Having gained a point he was willing to concede one, as promises meant nothing to him. Helen's question signified that a weakening wedge had entered her horror-filled mind, giving him his first tangible advantage.
Her next question was less pleasing. "Why?" she asked, "couldn't I give you half the money if—"
"I give you half the money if—"
"I can prove that I am not Helen Nellin, and I decide to keep it?"
"What a bright idea!" Brent exclaimed sarcastically. "Don't you know that the money isn't under your control, and that it would direct suspicion upon both of us?"

The Innocent Cheat

By Ruth Dewey Groves
AUTHOR OF "RICH GIRL-POOR GIRL," ETC.

"Oh don't be stazy," Brent roared.

"You will have to excuse me," Helen returned coldly and moved toward the wide doors that led into the hall. She did not give him a backward glance as she passed through them and disappeared in the direction of the breakfast room.

Brent scowled, hesitated a moment in indecision, and followed her. They met in the hall. In a glance Helen had seen that Shallimar was not at breakfast. She was going upstairs to seek her.

Brent stood in her way and stopped her before she reached the stairs.

"A week, remember," he said tensely; "and don't make any mistake about it. It's life or death for you."

Helen passed on without a word in reply. She felt cold, as though a breath from an icy chamber had been breathed upon her. She put her hand on the balustrade for support; it was so numb she scarcely sensed the wood.

She went directly to Shallimar's room, where she found her guest engaged in packing a small traveling bag. Shallimar looked up casually as Helen entered the room, but instantly she cried: "Have you seen a ghost?"

"I feel ill," Helen faltered, and collapsed into a convenient place beside her chair. She was as white as the handkerchief she lifted to her trembling lips.

Shallimar rushed to her with a bottle of cologne which she hastily dug out of her bag, and held it to Helen's nose.

Helen did not faint, but she did wish that she had gone to her own room instead of coming in here. Overestimating her endurance was a silly thing to do, she told herself. But it had seemed better to speed Shallimar on her way as decently as she could and then face her problem.

But the problem had not waited. It had filled her mind with panic. She should have known she must succumb to it. Her sense of guilt over disturbing her guest brought a halting apology to her lips.

Shallimar brushed it aside with a command to tell her what was troubling her.

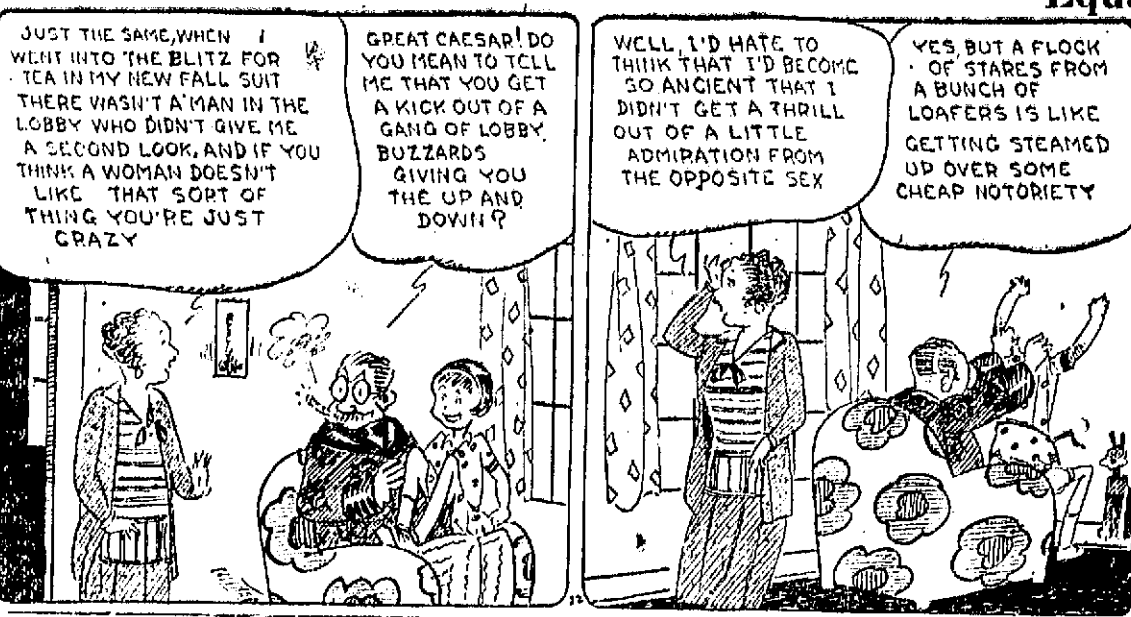

Helen maintained that she was physically ill, nothing more.

"Well," Shallimar said, and she was plainly pained, "if our school days count for nothing and you don't want to tell me why you and Miss Ennis went of somewhere without me this morning I won't tell you why I'm leaving so suddenly."

"You refused to do that before," Helen reminded her.

"Yes, I know," Shallimar admitted impatiently; "but I meant to tell

Mack's Far-Sighted Plans

Connie Mack must have felt great personal satisfaction in the result of that first world series game when Long Howard Ehmke made the Cubs look like amateurs.

No one dreamed that Mack would start Ehmke, a veteran whom many writers regarded as through. But Mack himself had known almost a month before the series that Ehmke was the man to pitch. With that idea in mind he left Howard at home when the Athletics went on their last road trip.

Ehmke was instructed to watch the Cubs play and jot down their weaknesses. Whether or not he knew at that time he was going to pitch the opener is not revealed, but he took notes faithfully and well.

The crowd didn't understand why Mack started Ehmke. That was why. Mack probably conferred with Ehmke on the notes he had taken, discovered the Cubs' weaknesses were the very faults Ehmke could best pitch to, and decided to let Howard take the bow.

This column mentioned weeks ago that Ehmke sat in the grandstand with a big notebook when the Cubs played the Phils. But the idea that Howard probably would pitch the opener didn't seep through. Looking back, Mack's plans seem obvious.

Many university and college coaches question the value of high school football in developing players. They hold that the youth who knows little about the game in his high school days becomes the better performer on the university gridiron.

Bob Zupke at the University of Illinois has turned out many grid stars who were nobodies in high school football. On the other hand with such an individual as Red Grange, a touted high school star, the Illinois mentor wrote football history—for Grange, at least.

Hugo Bezdek at Penn State places little importance to the prep record of an athlete. The individual is good for only so much football, Bezdek holds. Marek and Rune Clark Elmer Marek was a nationally known player when a member of the crack Washington high eleven, Cedar Rapids, Ia. At Ohio State University, the touted Marek was a flop. Rune Clark scorching Illinois prep gridirons, but as a member of the University of Illinois team he was no more than average. Clark, however, labored under an added difficulty, the fact that he was a younger brother of Patsy Clark, great Illinois halfback.

The trend of high school football today follows greatly the university style, that of sensational offenses and intricate plays. Field goal-kicking and points after touchdown are of minor importance among prep gridirons. Only passing attention is given the matter of adding that point after touchdown, which often costs a university team a conference or national championship.

Statistics of high school football show that the ratio of successful tries for point after touchdown is one out of four, and that the one often is the result of a forward pass.

The Cow is off the Track! AN ANCIENT PREJUDICE HAS BEEN REMOVED

Railroads have safely passed those danger signals of prejudice which caused folks to look upon them with fear. Holding aloft the semaphore of progress AMERICAN INTELLIGENCE cleared the track and, today, millions travel in ease and security.

"toasting did it"—

Gone is that ancient prejudice against cigarettes—Progress has been made. We removed the prejudice against cigarettes when we removed harmful corrosive ACRIDS (pungent irritants) from the tobaccos.

YEARS ago, when cigarettes were made without the aid of modern science, there originated that ancient prejudice against all cigarettes. That criticism is no longer justified. LUCKY STRIKE, the finest cigarette you ever smoked, made of the choicest tobacco, properly aged and skillfully blended—"It's Toasted,"

"TOASTING," the most modern step in cigarette manufacture, removes from LUCKY STRIKE harmful irritants which are present in cigarettes manufactured in the old-fashioned way.

Everyone knows that heat purifies, and so "TOASTING"—LUCKY STRIKE'S extra secret process—removes harmful corrosive ACRIDS (pungent irritants) from LUCKIES which in the old-fashioned manufacture of cigarettes cause throat irritation and coughing. Thus "TOASTING" has destroyed that ancient prejudice against cigarette smoking by men and by women.

"It's toasted"

No Throat Irritation-No Cough.

TUNE IN—The Lucky Strike Dance Orchestra, every Saturday night, over a coast-to-coast network of the N. B. C.

"It's Toasted"—the phrase that describes the extra "toasting" process applied in the manufacture of Lucky Strike Cigarettes. The finest tobaccos—the Cream of the Crop—are scientifically subjected to penetrating heat at minimum, 260°—maximum, 300°, Fahrenheit. The exact, expert regulation of such high temperatures removes impurities. More than a slogan, "It's Toasted" is recognized by millions as the most modern step in cigarette manufacture.

Is Your Bladder Weak? Do You Get Up Nights?

If your bladder is weak and you get up nights, suffer from frequent and painful urination, dribbling, highly colored urine, you should take immediate steps to remove the cause. Law Breaking On

It is, that the Sabbath should be observed, then the authorities enforcing our laws should require that it be observed by all. To discriminate in the enforcement of the Criminal Laws has a tendency to breed disrespect for law. While the law does not require the observance of the Sabbath as a religious duty, still because of the teachings and training of the people of our state, the observance of the Sabbath is observed by a great number of our people as a religious duty; and there is not a law on our Statute books which is better understood than the law with respect to the Sabbath.

The question is, Shall the law regarding the Sabbath be enforced? And on this question the people must answer. If it must be enforced, then how can the habitual and systematic violation of the Sabbath, which has been going on in our county openly for years, be justified or excused? And if it cannot be justified or excused, then we find ourselves in a very peculiar and embarrassing attitude; because, if we permit the open and habitual violation of the Sabbath Law by some, where is the border line, and just how will we discriminate against who should observe and who should not? It is a question that certainly invites consideration in order that we may be consistent on this proposition. Yours respectfully,

W. S. Atkins
